The Coolest Food and Drink Specials for the Great American Eclipse

The afternoon of August 21, 2017 will mark the first time since 1918 that a total solar eclipse will be visible across the entire contiguous United States. (And another one like it won't occur again until 2024.) To celebrate the occasion, restaurants and bars are adding a bit of starry magic to their menus with items inspired by this rare celestial event. It's a great excuse for a gathering, so cross your fingers for clear skies and don't forget your eclipse glasses!

Eclipse Negroni at Haven Rooftop: New York

Haven Rooftop conjures the eclipse with its red-hued Eclipse Negroni that transitions from a deep burgundy at the bottom to a paler shade of berry at the top. The striking effect, which is meant to symbolize the celestial phenomenon, is achieved by bringing together cinnamon-infused gin with Aperol, Campari and anise. Sip it on the bar's rooftop perch to get a glimpse of the partial eclipse expected to be visible in New York City.
