

Richard Johnson
The man who knows New York
rjohnson@nypost.com @HeadlineJohnson

Bella wings it on flight

BELLA Hadid isn't pining for The Weeknd. She found another man to have fun with — a stranger on a plane.

Hank Freid, who owns the Sanctuary Hotel off Times Square, was on a Delta flight from New York to Miami last week, sitting in first class — right next to Hadid, 20, who was heading to the now-infamous Fyre Festival in the Bahamas.

The two hit it off, a source told me, and Freid seemed to be enjoying a Bloody Mary, so Hadid, who had ordered a red wine, said, "I think I'm drinking the wrong thing. I'll have what you're having."

The duo exchanged phone numbers before they parted, but Freid got a text from her after midnight, asking if he wanted to go with her to a club. The married man declined.

Freid is hoping she and her friends will come to his Haven Rooftop.

The model's team had no comment.

Hadid, who saw The Weeknd with his new girlfriend, Selena Gomez, on Monday night at the Met Gala, told Teen Vogue, "Love hurts, but you have to pull through."

Bella Hadid is looking for friends in high places.